The Lydney Morning Berald. SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1865

AFTER-DINNER speeches are heard with proverbial indulgence. We shall not scrutinise closely the addresses of gentlemen who find comfort from a very small victory in the recol-lection of a considerable defeat. Whether in satire or admiration we know not, Mr. EAGAR has obtained the title of a colonial GLADSTONE We presume all this goes upon the understand ing that we take the standard of the Antipode mg that we take the standard of the Antipodes. Mr. Gladstone announces to Great Britain that he has four millions of surplus after passing through the terrific cotton trial, and that he is, therefore, prepared to alleviate the burdens of the country. Mr. Eagar, after a tenure of office not very lengthy, was obliged to confess to a deficit larger in amount the to a deficit larger in amount by comparison with the total expenditure than the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER could boast as excess in national income. We have no intention to charge upon Mr. EAGAR the original sin of that deficiency. He found it; he did not lessen it. His financial measures were such as in the opinion of persons favourable to the Administration of which he was a member numbering ourselves with them, were likely to damage—perhaps destroy the trade of the maintains that it was not a Protec tionist tariff, and that all he wanted was money. It was, however, strongly commended by his Protectionist supporters, who perceived in what direction he was moving, perfectly in harmony with his professions indeed as chief of the Protectionist party. We should not hold the Protectionist party. We should not hold Mr. Eacar responsible for exaggerated praise any more than we should accept the bitter reproaches he has sometimes incurred. But Mr. MARTIN is not satisfied with the rank of an English GLADSTONI. Mr. EAGAR is, in his opinion, far superior to the renowned British statesman. By what process he has arrived at this conclusion it would be difficult to trace. Mr. GLADSTONE is distinguished as a scholar of very high attainments. As a speaker he is perhaps unrivalled in the House of Commons. For thirty years he has been more or less conspicuous in the highest ranks of political life in a State first among the Constitutional Governments of the world. We think very highly of Mr. MARTIN's ability, but if we were to say that he is far superior to Lord BROUGHAN as a scholar and a philosopher-or the LORD CHANCELLOR as a lawyer-or to Lord PALMERSTON as a statesman, we should be paying a compliment about upon the scale of ex-aggeration which has enabled him to place Mr. FAGAR at some indefinite elevation above Mr. GLADSTONE. What was the quality of the nectar which so animated the brain that poured orth these honeyed encomiums? How happy must Mr. EAGAR have felt at the moment v his brave Australian lawyer pronounced him beyond doubt the first man in the financial

The truth is, the Ministry of Mr. MARTE tost a golden opportunity. They came in with the finances of the country shamefully dis-ordered, and with a strong feeling of interest in their success. They found a disposition to bear any reasonable additions to the existing if they had the courage to make them. Had the debt been promptly provided for, and wisely manipulated, the absurd arrangement of rival loans in London, contracted by the samparties, would not have rendered us something like a laughing-stock on 'Change. That chance was thrown away, and they failed because they

After all that has happened in the settlement of the Border Question we are not disposed to blame anybody in this country for not having arrived at some satisfactory conclusion. There seems to be a fatality in all these Border relations—a spirit of infatuation and contention by which all parties are blinded when it is peculiarly desirable that they she come to an accord by moderation mutual concession. There will found probably no method of set the controversy but by the interposition of that authority which created the state of things out of which it has arisen. The proper solution is a uniform tariff and universal system of Customs making the whole of the colonies one for the of collection, and distributing an them the proceeds and expense according to the population.

sulation. This done, municipal taxation ald supply everything necessary in addition. We have stated that we were among those who were disposed to give support to the Ministry of Mr. Martin and to his Treasurer, Mr. EAGAR. But there are interests to us far more important than any Ministry. If Mr. Martin's Administration was cruelly treated by the Press, we disclaim was cruelly treated by the Press, we disclaim any share of that injustice. Mr. Cowper will smile at the idea of influence over the Herold! smile at the idea of influence over the Her. Id:
All the public men of this country know perfectly well that they have never conferred the slightest favour upon the parties by whom it is conducted, and that they have conferred just as many as have been solicited. We make it our business to support the measures of Government when we approve of them—to oppose them whenever they are in our judgment per-nicious. We should be exceedingly glad if a more perfect system of party government existed in this country, in which it would be possible to support men and measures; to feel that there was an identity between them; that Ministers was an identity between them; that Ministers could be relied upon from session to session for the maintenance of principles; that in the relations of party life they would display the sensitive honour of the highest classes of English politicians. But, without intending any offence, we would point to the gentlemen who surrounded the chairman at the banquet, and recall to mind the doctrines they have taught and the measures they have espoused—the ideal of measures they have espoused—the ideal of government of which they are severally representatives, and ask whether it is possible for any journal, without sacrificing its own credit, to take up a set of men who are thrown into each other's society by considerations chiefly personal and in spite of their antecedents, and who are known to hold among them doctrines in such profound antagonism?

We shall be very glad to see Mr. MARTIN and his supporters in that attitude of opposition which he has promised, and, though not without one or two escapades, observed during the late session. A fair Upposition founded upon prin-ciple, relying upon truth, disdaining to accept paltry slanders and to accomplish petty victories by petty means, and holding sacred certain interests as being above the atmosphere of party interests as being above the atmosphere of party, —such an Opposition will tend to the improvement and purification of Government, and may train those who conduct it to discharge better their turn of office. For years pas-such has been the political state of the country that, had its material advancement depended upon the action of Government, it would have been now in Lankruptcy and ruin. Bu fortunately in colonies a Government may play many "fantastic tricks" without making play many "fantastic tricks" without making the people "weep," and it is long before even their extravagance can exhaust the plentiful resources which the bounty of nature, and the enterprise of Englishmen have placed within heir grasp.

Of Mr. EAGAR's speech there is very little to

Of Mr. EAGAR's speech there is very little to complain. If we looked upon his return as a reversal of the policy established by the last election (although undoubtedly invaded by the recent financial measures of Mr. Cowper we should think it a public misfortune; but when we compare the numbers at the poll for both candidates and the intersection. andidates, and take into account the whole circumstruces attending the election, we have no reason so to interpret it. Mr. EAGAR, no reason so to interpret it. Mr. EAGAR, among the candidates for political life, is far above the average, and it will afford us satisfaction if the experience of his past parliamentary career shall be preparatory to grea has inflicted heavy losses, and invites our atten-tion not only to the risks to which a large amount of property is daily exposed, but to the appliances we have for extinguishing fires. Two such fires as that at St. Mary's and that is York-street are enough to make the month of our city has so much destruction been com mitted by fire within the same brief interval of

Considering the nature of our climate in the summer time, and the combustible nature of many of the old and shingled houses in our city, the infrequency of fires and their imited degree of destructiveness are matter for congratulation. When we compare our experience with that of the American cities, we find ittle reason for complaint on this score. But during the last four or five years fires have been omewhat more frequent than before, and they have occurred more in the heart of the city there large masses of property are stored, and where the danger of an extensive conflagration s at its maximum. We have, however, as yet escaped any such wide-spread devastation, though it must be admitted that the risk of it though it must be admitted that the risk of it has been and continues great

The fire on Thursday night occurred in a store which was fortunately isolated on three sides. York-street in front, Barrack-street at the side, and York-lane in the rear, cut it off from direct contact with other premises on all those sides. By great exertions the adjoining warehouse of Messrs. BIRENS AND Co. was preserved from ignition and its immunity is a striking illustration of the value of good party walls, a parapet, and a slate roof. Had it been a shingled roof nothing could have saved it, as during the early period of the fire the southerly wind blew not only the sparks, but the flames, right against the roof. Owing to this comparative isolation the fire was confined to the building in which it originated, and though it was impossible to subue it, it was left to burn itself out. Had the same of fire burst out in some warehouses more closely and more dangerously environed, it would have been very difficult to have checked its spread. he danger would be proportionally increased such an occurrence were to happen on a sum-mer night when a hot wind was blowing, and when the shingle roofs were dry and readily inflammable. The rain on Thursday night fortunately kept all the roofs wet, so that the wind were comparatively harmless, though the proprietors of many neighbouring proper-ties did not consider it needless to take the precaution of watching and watering their roofs ignited particles as were driven about on Thurs ay would have been considerable, although th wind was then fortunately light. The expediency of the Act for limiting the storage of kerosene and other inflammable oils which was discussed during the late session of Parliament, has been rendered additionally obvious. It is impossible to extinguish a fire where great quantities of such inflammable material are gathered, and no such accumula-tion ought to be allowed. The restriction is, of course, some hindrance to trade, but this must submitted to in the interests of the citizens at large. Within the last twelve months, a very destructive petroleum fire has occurred Philadelphia, and it might as easily happen in Sydney, if the necessary pre-cautions are neglected. These precau-tions are the more necessary, because are about to become manufacturers as well as importers of kerosene. The recent discovery of oil-bearing shale in several locali-ties promises to establish for us a new industry, and we have already two companies engaged in active preparations for bringing the native oil into the market. We published a few weeks ago an account of an ingenious arrangement adopted in San Fran-cisco for indicating at the earliest possible mement the exact locality of a fire. The plan was too complicated for our adoption here at present, as our fire organisations are not so complete as those of the American cities. Bu a simpler plan of indicating the locality might be practicable, and would certainly be useful because upon the promptness of action at the first depends mainly the chance of success in nest depends mainly the chance of success in extinguishing the flames. The fire-bells ring, but they indicate merely the fact of a fire, and not its whereabouts, and by the time people can be guided to the spot by the glare, the fire has generally got a good hold. If the city were divided into sections, and each section numbered, the bells could be made to indicate the section by rapid consequitive strakes. On the section by rapid consecutive strokes. On hearing the number of strokes that the bell tolls, every one would know directly the section in which the fire was. It would be an additional advantage if all the engine-houses were connected together by the electric telegraph.

The supply of water on Thursday was not so prompt as was desirable or possible, and the same thing took place at St. Mary's. Cathedral. This is a defect that should be inquired into, and any similar delay should be made impossible in the future. In all large establishments, however, where the damage done by a fire would be far greater than could be covered by insurance, it is highly expedient that there should be a stand piper running up the interior of the building with a hose and nozzle on each of the floors. Water can thus be turned on at the first discovery of the fire without waiting for the arrival of the engines or being dependent on the plugs in

We have adopted this precaution ourselves, and, therefore, we can with a clear onscience recommend it to others who con duct large establishments that it is important to preserve from the derangement as well as from the loss of a fire. The difference between turning water on within five minutes after the breaking out of a fire and waiting for balf-an-hour till the brigades can arrive and get effectually to work, will in many cases make all the difference between saving building and witnessing its hopeless de

The loss occasioned by the fire in York-street is partly covered by insurance, and will be, therefore, spread over a considerable num-ber of shareholders in the different insurance companies. St. Mary's Cathedral was uninsured, but the cost of its restoration will also be spread over a large number of contributors. The Roman Catholics in this colony form nearly one-third of the whole community, and they will get also some help from abroad. Our fire insurance companies have had some considerable draughts of late on their resources, but their number is larger than it used to be, and this affords every facility for spreading the heavy risks over a wide surface. Several inventions have been produced of late years to accomplish the extinction of fires by the generation of uninflammable gases. The rinciple is a sound one, as an atmosphere that ill not feed combustion is a far better extinguisher than the most copious supply of water could be, besides having the advantage of not damaging the building or its contents. But the theory has not yet been reduced to practice in a generally available form. But idea will not be lost, and it will some day be lost, and it will some day developed. Science is always tending to realise the ideal, and to turn the day-dreams of philoine ideal, and to turn the day-dreams of philosophers into the familiar incidents of common life.

The Firm is York-street.—The fire which occurred on the premises of Mesers John Fraser and Co., of York-street, on Thursday night, continued to burn all vesterday, and is likely to smoulder for some time longer. There is an increase compact mass of goods within the area of the building, which, though costed over with ashes, are not wholly consumed. Of course, it has been impossible to remove the debris, and it will, therefore, be two or three days before the fire is quite extinguished. The firement of the Lawrance Companies' Brigade were fell in charge lest night, and plied three hoses attached to the hydrants. The south and nearly the whole of the cest fronts have faillen down, and most of the interior walls have tunibled in. As stated yesterday, the block of buildings to the north was saved by the coursecous exertions and skill of the internet; and it does not appear that the adjoining premises of Mesers. Berens, Levi, and Seligmann have been agreat body of fire on the buildings destroyed was heated through yesterday, and showed that there must have been agreat body of fire on the other side. Some of the downward windows on the opposite side of the street have been scoubed by the flames which lesped across the roadway. The buildings were of three stories, the height being about fity feet, the length shout ninety feet, and the depth about sounty feet. Under the stores there were cellars, used for the storage of spirits, wines, &c., but there is little or no reason to hope that the fire had not descended to them before they could have been filled with water. The books and papers of the firm fortunately were saved. A quantity of sail, stored at the back, has not been destroyed; some hours of the course, and because of soap have also been saved. Most of these things, however, have been enjoyed the remover of the spectatory and, if they had not, their value is but small in proportion to the worth of the property dest there is every prospect of wet weather. The streets of the city are coated over with mud, but a few smart showers will thoroughly cleanse them and conduce to the health of the community.

KINOSINE.—The discovery in this colony of mineral shale producing kerosene of its more extensive than is generally supposed. Notification has already been made of the formation of a company called. The Hartley Kerosene Oil and Paraffine Company," and the trucks of their raw material forwarded to Sydney have for some days past attracted the attention of passengers by rail. The district of Hartley appears to be very rich in this mineral wealth, for other localities have been discovered said to be quite company. This new lead has been taken up by Mesers. Stanford and Co. (importers of kerosene oil to this and the neighbouring colonies) and Mr. William Jolly, of Sydney. Some of it is contiguous to that selected by Mr. Samuel and Mr. Want; and another portion is distant from it about five nides. The experiments and examinations which have been made during the past few months are said to justify very sanguine expectations, and it is intended to take immediate stops to ascertain in the most practical way the value of the discovery by the formation of a second Kerosene and Paraffine Company. The utilisation of this new source of wealth will add another important article to our list of exports, and when both companies are in full operation; it will also tend to chaspen an oil which has become of almost universal consumption. The extensive use of this shale in the manufacture of gas will improve its quality, and the extensive market slose at heard scenars to give reasonable promise that while our natural resources are developed, enterprise will used with its appropriate reward.

The Emperor arrived here yesterday evening, at 6 clock, after having travelled through one of the most cultivated, most picturesque, and at the same time most magnificent countries that can possibly be imagnised. When he was leaving Tizi-Ouzo all the population of Grest Kabylia, having descended from their numerous villages, (which are situated on montainous peaks like fortressen) assembled in immense crowds along the path his imperial Majesty was expected to take. The Emperor, before he caves this morning, is to hear mass in the Military Chapel, and will immediately afterwards set out on the road to Algiers.

Now, Sir, I put it to the grave consideration of the Mayor and Aldermen, and of all whom it concerns, whether it would be predent and right to sink many thousands of public mency in an undertaking which the achievements of actince may render absolutely useless? A few steps more in chemical research and mechanical invention, and the world may witness a revolution in artificial illumination, more weeping and triumphant than that effected by the introduction of gas—a revolution which will make tallow, and oil, and gas, as segents of light, comparatively obsolete and werthless.

THE excitement occasioned by the opening of this gold-field has now subsided, and mining enterprise begins to assume a more healthy and settled appearance. Comparatively speaking, very little work has been done during the month, for although the rush during the first few days numbered several thousands, at no period have more than from four to five hundred men been digging, and probably not more than two hundred and fifty regularly settled down to hard work.

for although the rush during the first few day's numbered several thousands, at no period have more than from four to five hundred men been digging, and probably not more than two hundred and fifty regularly settled down to hard work.

The attention of the miners has been chiefly directed to the bed and banks of St. Anthony's Creek. No heavy finds have been made, the yield varying from I dwr. to 1 ox. to the load. A fair proportion of payable claims are working between the Gravel Pit Hills and the camp on sandry little gutters which appear to be offsheets of some main lead existing in the reighbourhood. Four parties are working near the summit of one of these hills, and the prospectors have struck as me good rough gold, giving about an ounce to the load, and the general opinion is that a deep lead will be discovered in this locality. On the surface hills, about a mile above the town, gold is being obtained in payable quantities, and the miners appear satisfied with the prospect before them. At several points of the creek, and more especially near the junction of St. Anthony's with Wilhurndale, a solid bed of cemented conglomerate has been laid bare on stipping about nine feet of the alluvial. This has been proved to contain gold, and at present several portions are under assay. Should the yield per ton be over 3 dwts., it will be extensively worked, as the cement is ossily crushed, and can be raised at a cost of 2s. per ton. Prospecting parties are sinking in some of the many quartz reefs which are cropping out all over the estate. Stone has been obtained containing gold, but no quantity has up to the present time been crushed. Levels are being taken of the Winburndale Rivulett, which the raverses the subject when we have considerable undertaking; it is to be about eight miles long, and will carry enough water to supply twenty-five sluice heads. The extraordinary dry weather we have experienced during the last as months has amtorities to pay handsomely difficult to estimate the amount of gold obtained during th

The South Australian Register, of the 15th, says:—

"We have already referred to the shocking occurrence (a muriny) on board the ship Rocklight, at King George's Sound, which resulted in the death of one of the esamen. A correspondent has kindly furnished us with a report of the inquest, which was held on the body on the 7th instant, before Sir A. Compbell and a jury of five. The inquest had not concluded when the branch steamer left the Sound, Several witnesses, including the captain, were examined, and showed that the crew were in a state of insubordination, that a violent assault was made on the captain by the decreased sailor (M'Crus) and his follow-seamen, and that the mate, who had also been attacked, escaped from the hands of the sailors, reached the cabin, and armed himself with a revolver, with which he shot the deceased. PORT JACKSON. By Macquarie's Grove, and rough stony screen, I love to roam admiring the scene.

Whilst round the green Isle, and en the rocky shore,
Curling waves and glistening spray dashes o'er;
Here the Creator hath sublimely wrought
For man's convenience, a majestic port,
And guided to it by His wondrous hand,
A people to cultivate the land!
Now, amid evergreens that slope to the bays,
Content resorts, with joyance, to praise
Indulgent Heaven, which freely bestows
All good, happiness, and mind's repose.
